These leaves are made in a paste and mixed with a little eucalyptus oil and water (sometimes tea water is used). Another method of making mehndi is to dry these leaves in the sun and make a powder. Before application, you have to make a paste with water and some lemon juice with a few drops of eucalyptus oil. Keep this pasta overnight or 9 hours and then use it. If you are willing to make your mehndi you need to find good mehndi leaves or you can go for dry mehndi powder available on the market. To make cones use Cellophane or Flora phane or Mylar leaf. Cone manufacturing and handling are easier with thicker leaves. Use seal to join the cone. Secret tips for obtaining a dark mehndi color Fill the cone up to half or two-thirds of the length with prepared henna. Turn the cone, just above the henna paste and use a small rubber band to seal the cone. Cut the tip a little at first. Check and adjust, depending on your choice. In order to maintain pressure consistency, continue to sink the rubber band by the length of the cone. Letting the mehndi mixture rest overnight can help in a better color, as mehndi needs a few hours to release the dye. Mix the lemon juice with the sugar in a ratio of 1:3. Give this lemon juice mixture in the applied mehndi using a ball of This method ensures that the mehndi does not dry out and stays on the skin for longer. Leaving mehndi in your hands for at least 2-3 hours gets darker. Once the mehndi takes off, expose your hands to the smoke of some heated nails in a frying pan. This also makes your mehndi color dark. Don't wash your mehndi mehndi Water. Instead, use some coconut oil to clean the remaining pieces of dry mehndi. Take some cloves and dry them in the pan. Put your hands just above the pan in such a parallel way that you get all the heat directly. The nail will release fumes that help darken the mehndi stain. Always do a cone patch test to be used to apply mehndi designs. So you can check the stain as well as the consistency. Avoid any chemical-based henna because while it will help achieve a faster stain, it will cause your skin to dry out and scratch. Why are Mehndi's designs so famous?
